Here's a breakdown of the past month and a half. I made a personal goal for myself when I was younger of making myself do something daily. I didn't really give myself a choice in the matter, so I'm not surprised I didn't see results, but I decided to start again. I decided that I needed to be doing something all day long. I began to exercise in the morning, which is the first thing I can think of that I've been good at doing in the past, although the activity itself was only mildly enjoyable. I have a hard time getting motivated to do it, but I'm a stubborn person so I push on. I have been successful in getting myself to the gym, but I hate the weight lifting portion of it. I hate pushing myself too hard. I've been blogging almost every day since January 1st, which is a long time for me. I've done some writing for clients, such as content for an online company. I had a horrible cold, which I managed to take back with medication, however I am still struggling with emotions. I still haven't found the remedy I need, as you can probably tell. I've been fighting off a cold in some way or another since September, which is quite strange for me. I only recently had a cold on March 5th and 6th, and I think I caught the worst of it. All of the sudden my ears would be clogged, I'd get sick a lot, it was relentless. I would think I was just getting a cold, but I was obviously getting sick and dealing with it poorly. I was never put on any medication that would knock me out. I went to a doctor in January, as I did every year to get my ADHD medication renewed. It is a waste of my time, they just tell me "this is what you are supposed to do". I'm really against doctors. You pay them, they tell you what to 2d92ce491b
