Telstra in Australia has numerous cell phone services for both Australia and New Zealand -. COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — The South Carolina Senate has approved a bill to end state spending on faith-based adoption agencies, with the aim of lifting restrictions on same-sex couples. The measure, which passed 37-3, is meant to overturn a state law that prohibits government entities from contracting with any organizations that employ a person of a different religion than the organization's own. Critics say the law prevents same-sex couples from adopting children through faith-based agencies, but supporters say it's a matter of child welfare. Opponents of the bill say they don't believe the state should be in the adoption business, but supporters say changing the law will benefit the children, who will get a better chance at finding a family. "Anytime you are giving birth to a child and you're planning to bring that child up in an environment where you have a family where that child feels welcomed and loved and supported and accepted, you have a better chance of a successful family," said state Sen. Jason Perrilloux, the Republican sponsor of the bill. "You have a better chance of a stable and a loving home." South Carolina is the second state to pass legislation that would stop state entities from entering into contracts with adoption agencies that are faith-based. Republican Gov. Nikki Haley vetoed a similar bill last year but her successor, Gov. Henry McMaster, has not indicated whether he will sign the measure this time. Perrilloux said he introduced the bill after consulting with faith-based advocates and the United States Conference of Catholic Bishops. "They all told me this was a common-sense change," he said. "This was not going to open the door to gay adoption but instead it was just going to be an open door for adoption for those same-sex couples who have been given a crushing and unfair law against them." South Carolina Republicans are discussing possible alternative plans in the wake of the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling striking down part of the federal Defense
