By default, it detects the location of the profile belonging to the user that's currently logged on, but you can redirect it to another Chrome App Data folder if you wish. As soon as you hit the 'Show Passwords' button, the program fetches all of the detected passwords from the specified profile, alongside the corresponding website and username. The app makes use of the Stylish extension, so if you installed any extensions recently, you might experience some compatibility issues. However, a simple restart of your browser usually solves such a problem, because Stylish doesn't provide any data persistence. The average list of items to be erased from Chrome is small, mostly because if you use Chrome to visit your favourite social media sites, you probably store your login credentials there. The lack of available information can be explained by the fact that such websites store their passwords on a separate server, so they only retrieve the list of such credentials when you log on. The only major drawback of this app is that it does not cater to Windows 7, although it works on all later versions. Chrome Password Remover by Bostonsoft, is available for free.
