It was an inter-county hurling competition organised by the Gaelic Athletic Association. In its most recent incarnation it was first played on 3 July 2017. All titles earned are officially classed as All-Ireland Senior Hurling Championships. All-Ireland final winners receive the Liam MacCarthy Cup. The final is usually played as part of the All-Ireland Senior Hurling Championship weekend. It is one of the most prestigious games in the GAA and is currently the most-watched match in the sport. The first ever match was played on 10 February 1887 when Blackrock lost to Westmeath, the first game of the All-Ireland Senior Hurling Championship. The last game of the All-Ireland Senior Hurling Championship was contested on 6 September 2020, when Kilkenny defeated London to win their first All-Ireland title since 1958. The championship has, in recent years, been staged on a single-elimination basis. The All-Ireland final was previously staged in four-team groups. However, since the introduction of the All-Ireland Qualifiers in 2011, four teams compete in a play-off series leading up to the All-Ireland final. Participants
