Ever. As I'm writing this, the House is currently debating a bill that, if passed, would do away with all the major federal agencies we know today. The bill is called "The Department of Peace," but it's not getting any love from anyone in either party because, y'know, everything the Department of Peace does is peace. If this bill is signed into law, the Department of Peace will be responsible for "ensuring the public safety, national security and general welfare, by advising and coordinating actions that promote world peace and domestic tranquility." It's all gooey, fuzzy, touchy-feely shit that's not getting done today. It's also a nightmare for the Department of Peace, which is what it's been for the past few years, since it lost the Departments of Health, Education, and Human Rights (which are gone, thanks to the stupid budget cuts). If this bill is passed, it would mean that, in the future, we would just be a collection of little city-states and fiefdoms. While we are trying to make all these big decisions, the Department of Peace will only be able to spend its time doing things like saying "No, it's not the department's fault" when a piece of shit like the Patriot Act gets voted down. It will have no ability to make laws, and it will not have the responsibility to make laws. Plus, it will have no authority to keep track of the amount of money the Department of Peace gets to do its job. How would this help peace? How? [Via Bluegrass Monthly]" A constant revelation of God to his creature in the divine works of the creation." (Sermon #2, Catechism of the Catholic Church, 7)

Inspiration Catholic spirituality is an atmosphere for intellectual, emotional, moral, and spiritual growth. Catholic faith is an umbrella for growing a unique relationship with God and transforming our lives. Catholic ministry is a spiritual dynamic, where God takes on human form, not just through the sacraments, but through the things we do for each other.

A vibrational analysis of the halogen bond between imidazolium and a Cl atom. A vibrational analysis of the potential energy surface of the halogen bond between imidazolium ion and a Cl atom is performed. The analysis shows that the halogen bond has significant charge transfer. The change of the vibrational frequency of the donor side is also investigated. The change of the vibrational frequency of the donor side is compared with that of the accepting side. The results indicate that the halogen bond causes
