The in-game Player Impact Engine, introduced in FIFA 15, can tell a player's impact by taking a number of different factors into account. For example, the engine takes into account a player's body type; the speed at which the ball is traveling; where the ball is in relation to the player; the force of the opponent's tackle; the effectiveness of the player's counter-attack; and how well the player is using his body position to shield the ball. The results of this calculation are displayed within the player's profile, allowing the player to check their stats on-screen while they play. Attacking Players On-Ball Impacts Composure Passing Players Sleight of Hand Skill and Instinct Defending Players Speed and Awareness Lamborghini Football's Adreno 320 is the industry-leading graphical processing unit (GPU) that powers EA SPORTS FIFA 22. Its power-efficient architecture maximizes performance for graphical fidelity, while delivering 3x the frame rate and 2x the power-efficient performance of the previous generation of GPUs. The Adreno chip delivers stunning visuals and fluid gameplay, all with incredibly low power consumption. This allows you to play more, game longer and do more in-depth visual tasks. The Adreno chip also helps you see and react to opponents in all-new ways, from the way they display aggression and class to the way they control the ball. If you have an EA SPORTS FIFA console or previously purchased FIFA Ultimate Team content, and you also own FIFA 18 on any platform, you may also be eligible to redeem the FIFA 19 Digital Edition code on your FIFA 22 disc.
