Note Photoshop's undo operation only serves to undo the last action made to a particular layer. Don't be surprised if you need to make changes to layers you have not even created. One major disadvantage of using Photoshop is that it is a tool for photo editing, not for drawing. If you're a beginner, don't expect to draw lines, ellipses, or circles. Although it supports those operations, Photoshop does not recognize them as graphic objects. Figure 1-2 shows the original image before and after a layer has been activated and positioned. Figure 1-2. Here's the initial photo: a collage of rocks and a few plants. The background layer has been applied and positioned as shown in Figure 1-2. Figure 1-2. As shown in the left image, the background layer is currently applied and positioned. From this state, the image can be manipulated with a painting brush (a symbol that looks like a paintbrush). Note that the paintbrush looks slightly different depending on the image's color mode; for a grayscale image, a color paintbrush is used, whereas for a color image a color paintbrush is selected. # The Layers Window The most important thing to get used to when using Photoshop is the Layers window. To access the Layers window, choose Window?Layers. The window is shown in Figure 1-3. Figure 1-3. Here's the Layers window with two layers open: the Background layer (on the left) and the Brush layer (on the right). The layer with the little arrow at the top right is the Brush layer (refer to Figure 1-3). To access this in the Finder, select the Brush layer and press the Return key. The Layers window is divided into two main areas: the layers themselves and the layer settings

Philip Plonka, the former CEO of ServiceNow, has left the company. Marc Smallwood, the company's new CEO, was elevated to that role on November 29, 2018. He was former CEO of SumTotal Systems, and spent several years running Oracle's technology licensing business. Meanwhile, the company, which makes software that helps businesses automate and manage their operations, was hit in September by a slew of bad press, including a report that the company's CEO was planning a reduction in staff. On October 2, 2018, ServiceNow announced that CEO Plonka, who joined the company in 2014, would be stepping down as CEO. "ServiceNow has been one of my most rewarding career experiences to date," Plonka said in a statement. "As CEO, I worked with a talented and passionate team to expand our footprint around the world and help our customers achieve their business objectives." "Of course, I will miss the great people, the incredible team, the inspiring culture, and the many amazing opportunities to work with them. I am grateful to so many, and appreciate the innumerable ways their collective drive, passion, and talent continually elevate the business." ServiceNow said in September that it would not seek another CEO. Today, in an email to Light Reading, ServiceNow's Smallwood declined to comment on any reasons for Plonka's departure. He noted that Plonka will be stepping down as executive chairman. Unlike ServiceNow, Plonka was not part of ServiceNow's original founding team. He came on the company in 2014, and served as CEO until he left the company last month. He remains on the company's board. Prior to the company, Plonka spent nearly a decade at IBM as CMO, and also held a number of top executive roles with Symantec. This year, at the company's annual customer conference, ServiceNow's COO Matt McGee said he would continue to stay in that role while the company looked for a new CEO. In a blog post, Plonka said he had put his own intention to leave into action as of November 28, 2018. In addition to being named CEO, Marc Smallwood was also promoted to president and expanded his senior management team to include CFO Mike Martelli, VP of Strategy Karthik Krishnakumar, VP of Product Mark Mills, and VP of Engineering Krishna Ramanarayanan.
