This topic helps...Q: How to build a webhook that triggers a WebhookTrigger I'm trying to build a WebhookTrigger, and understand what the `_meta *` property represents. For example, is there a solid understanding of what the following would do? `const webhookTrigger = new WebhookTrigger(_meta({ token: 'foo', client: 'foo', trigger: 'trigger' }));` Somewhere in my code, I have something that looks like this: `const trigger = new WebhookTrigger(_meta({ token: 'foo', client: 'foo', trigger: 'trigger' }), 'trigger');` Am I supposed to do something with the `_meta` property, where it is stored? A: Yes, you are supposed to use the `_meta` property. From the documentation: Each webhook is determined by the meta data specified in the body of the request. The default meta field names and values are token, client, and trigger. These are documented here: So `_meta` is a canonical way to construct a webhook. You can use other meta field names like `_data` to pass data to the webhook. This documentation explains how: `d0c515b9f4`
