Ipriflavone, a potent nonpeptide antagonist of calcitonin gene-related peptide (CGRP), was encapsulated into hydroxypropyl methacrylate (HPMC)-based microgel-forming terpolymers (HPMC/PVA/ethanol; HPMC/PVA/sorbitol; HPMC/PVA/sorbitol/ethanol). An inverse relationship between the amount of drug entrapped into the polymers and their release rate was found. The drug release kinetics was characterized by a diffusion-controlled release mechanism. The system was shown to sustain and/or enhance the release of the drug. Microgels with a size of 235-655 microm were obtained and loaded with an approximately equal amount of drug (0.12-0.24 mg/g). An apparent lack of effect on release kinetics was observed with a decrease in hydrophilic co-polymer content (HPMC/PVA). The release profiles of the microgels were comparable to those obtained in vitro for CP-67,700 without a hydrogel layer. The pattern of release was more sustained, and the length of the release phase was significantly increased with the addition of a second (sorbitol) hydrophilic co-polymer. These findings suggest that the addition of hydrophilic co-polymers not only has the potential to increase the amount of drug which can be delivered to the target tissue from the microgel system, but also to enhance the length of the release phase.Evaluation of the efficacy and safety of sertaconazole oral suspension with wash-
